IT CAUSED TWO WEDDINGS.

A Man Who Was in Love for Ten Years but Couldn't Say So.

Proposes After Overhearing Another Man at a Hotel.

If a hundred Benedicts were to tell in turn the manner in which they won their wives there would be one hundred different methods that had been employed. Each courtship, as well as each mosal is and always has been a novelty. While in general there may be mething like a sameness, there is in each individual case points of difference which distinguish it from all that have or ever will be, says the Philadelphia

The case of Thomas Edwards, famil iarly known as Tom Edwards, of Baltimore, who, with his handsome bride, is spending his honeymoon in a quiet retreat near Phoenixville, is interesting enough to be perpetuated for the sake of other hesitating swains. Tom is wellto-do in money matters, and is within a few years of rounding out a maif cen-tury of an eventful life. The account of what he regards as the greatest triumph of his life is given as he related waiting for his mail at the post-office.
